

Molly A. Sullivan is an associate attorney at Savage O'Donnell Affeldt Weintraub and Johnson, that focuses on a client-centered practice, dedicating substantial time and energy to ensuring the client is updated, aware, and ready for the challenges their cases present.

Molly was born in Fort Sill, Oklahoma while her father, then an artillery officer in the United States Marine Corps was stationed there. Shortly thereafter, her parents settled in Phoenix, Arizona, where she spent her childhood and teen years. Always on the move, she graduated from Regis University in Denver, Colorado with a B.A. in Politics, and minors in History and Spanish. She remained in the "Mile-High City," completing her J.D. from University of Denver, Sturm College of Law in May 2016. Upon the insistence of a friend in the fall of 2016 Molly arrived in Tulsa, Oklahoma, believing she would be staying approximately six weeks or less, however, there was something truly grand about "Green Country," and continues to love life in Oklahoma.

During her time at the firm, as a legal intern and eventual associate attorney after passing the Oklahoma Bar Exam in 2017, she has focused on complex civil litigation issues, with an emphasis on preparation and knowledge of the law, particularly regarding complex civil procedure issues and creative application of oft-overlooked statutes. The majority of her practice consists of complex domestic relations law, including child custody, domestic violence, divorce, and other post-decree issues.

Additionally, Molly has experience in Oklahoma appellate work, and looks forward to continuing to grow in this field of expertise. She has spent a substantial amount of time, both during law school in Colorado and particularly since becoming an attorney in Oklahoma, absorbing the particular nuances of domestic litigation, particularly relocation law, the constitutional rights at issue, general legal theory, and practical application to complex cases. Molly was an instructor for a Continuing Legal Education Class to the Tulsa County Bar Association Family Law Section on December 1, 2017, titled "Relocation: The Current Law and its Pitfalls."

Outside of work, Molly enjoys traveling; participation in state and local politics, including volunteering for various election campaigns and ballot initiatives; and spending time with her dogs.